Shabd Baan – Synopsis

Concept & Writing by Animesh Pandit

Shabd Baan is an intense dramatic exploration of grief, dharma, and divine accountability, imagined through a searing conversation between Gandhari and Shri Krishna in the aftermath of the Mahabharata. The war has ended, but its silence is heavier than the clang of weapons. In this silence, a mother rises, not with prayers, but with questions sharp as arrows.

Gandhari confronts Krishna not as a devotee, but as a mother who has lost all her sons. Her grief becomes a force that even divinity cannot ignore. She demands to know why such destruction was allowed, asking, “After unleashing this devastation, where are you going now?” Through her voice, the play captures the agony of every mother who became childless because of a war she never chose.

She urges Krishna to answer not as God, but as a witness to suffering. Her questions pierce the idea of divine purpose: “If you could not prevent this war, then what is the meaning of being God?” The exchange reveals a profound truth—when their children are at stake, even mothers can challenge God without hesitation.

Shabd Baan extends beyond this single encounter. It represents a larger creative vision: a series of unfiltered, imagined conversations from Indian history, where characters speak the truths that were never recorded but always resonated beneath the surface.

Through emotionally charged dialogue and philosophical depth, the play becomes a timeless confrontation between human pain and cosmic design—an artistic journey shaped entirely by the vision and writing of Animesh Pandit.

Shabd Baan – Director’s Note

Concept & Writing by Animesh Pandit

Shabd Baan - “word arrows” - is a theatrical experiment where words become weapons, wounds, and windows. It is envisioned as a larger series of unfiltered, uncomfortable, extended conversations between iconic figures from Indian history — conversations that may have taken place, or perhaps should have. Conversations that tradition kept quiet, but humanity needed to hear.

This opening chapter steps into the heavy silence after the Mahabharata. The war is over, yet the battlefield still trembles with unanswered questions. In that silence, Gandhari rises - not as a queen, not as a devotee, but simply as a mother. A mother who has lost all her sons and now stands before Shri Krishna, demanding not miracles, but explanations.

She asks Krishna to answer her not as God, but as a witness. She challenges him with a rawness only a grieving mother can bear: “If you could not stop this destruction, what is the meaning of being God?” Her pain becomes her power, her grief her clarity. And in a moment of profound truth, she teaches him:

“ऐसा भी कभी तुम न्याय करो,

शत्रू को नहीं — शत्रुता हरो।”

True justice is not the destruction of an enemy, but the destruction of enmity.

This play is conceived as a musical and poetic drama, where characters converse in verse, question in melody, and break in rhythm. The stage is minimal, the emotions maximal.

*As a director, my intention is to let the audience witness a rare sight - a mother scolding God with innocence, and God listening with surrender. Shabd Baan invites you into a space where mythology becomes human, grief becomes philosophy, and words become awakening.*
